OWNER-MANAGER PROGRAMME (OMP) COURSE CURRICULUM

Analysis of Business Problems

This course is intended to sharpen the participant's basic ability to think about complex real-world business problems. It also serves as an introduction to the case study method

Marketing Management

The objective of this course is to develop an understanding of the basic elements in marketing strategy such as product planning, market selection, distribution and pricing. Also, it also studies how to integrate all these elements in a coherent marketing mix.

Operations Management

Here, participants are introduced to the frameworks, key concepts and tools needed to design, implement, control and improve the value chain of operating systems

Control / Accounts Management

Participants will look at the development and use of financial and other quantitative data as an aid to business decision making. Major topic areas include financial reporting, cost accounting, budgetary and control systems

Management of Human Resources

This covers topics of personnel administration like human resources planning, recruitment, appraisal, compensation, training and development

Team Building

Proper teamwork makes for greater flexibility, speed and quality of customer service. It is becoming more important for today's managers to have a good understanding of team building processes

Communication Skills

This section will help participants reach a thorough understanding of the impact of top management communication style on employee attitude and performance, and know how to design communication strategies appropriate to their purpose

Financial Management

This section of the course is expected to provide the participant with a good understanding of the financial environment and how financial decisions impact on various aspects of a company's operations

Economic Analysis

This course develops essential concepts and methods which will enable the manager to understand the global and local macroeconomic environment in which his company operates and factor it into his business decisions

Social and Political Environment of Business

A clear understanding of the environment of the firm, especially of the political economic milieu; the relationship between government, business and society; and trends in national strategy within the context of international political economy trends is imperative for the strategically-minded general manager. The unit is designed to help managers identify a broad range of stakeholders in the environment of the firm to enhance the capacity for managing relationships with these stakeholders

Organisational Learning

In a rapidly changing world, the ability to stay alive and grow is largely a function of an organisational climate that allows a rate of learning that is equal to or greater than the pace of change in the firm. The sessions consider these cultural issues and the ladders of human development in firms

Business Strategy

Business Strategy sessions use the case study approach to emphasise the unique leadership role (often referred to as the helicopter view) of the Chief Executive as the strategist. The sessions explore practical examples of situations where the strategy process is either planned and directed or contingent and emergent

Business Ethics

This course explores the fiduciary responsibilities of business executives and the responsibilities of business firms towards their main stakeholders

Change Management

Change is an inevitable reality, yet people and organisations tend to resist it. Organisations that resist change consequently become unable to compete. The Change Management sessions consider reasons why organisations oppose change and the generic approaches to proactive change
